TABLES SHOW OVERCROWING IN CAMPS NOT GENERAL Tables were cited to show that overcrowding in the camps and can tenments had not been general, and that the sickness had come mostly in the camps where medical epinion had agreed it was least to be expected. The history of the development and building of the cantonments was given in detail, to show that every precaution possible had been taken.

Analyzing the efforts of the Ordnance Bureau, the secretary said that General Crozier had urged for years a greater artiflery preparation; that he at least had realized the time gunmaking required. But even France herself, "with the enemy at her throat." he added, had not been able to what vast gun programs the war would lead inte.

During his general statement of the war plan and how it was developed, Mr. Baker was rarely interrupted.
In his statement to the committee the secretary said:

When we started into this war I think it was commonly thought throughout the country that our contribution at the outset might well be financial and industrial. The industries of this country were largely devoted at that time to the manufac- there. ture of war materials for our slites.

"As I suggested this morning, when we went into that market we found it largely occupied, so that our problem was not going to a shee factory and saying, 'Make shoes for us,' but it was going to a factory which never made shoes, because all the shoe factories were busy making shoes for people from whom we could not take them. and saying, 'Learn how to make shoes in order that you may make them for

'Now, of course, that is not true of shoes, but it is true of machine guns. it is true of other arms, it is true of simmunition, it is true of forging cain the country, and all of this time we had not merely not to disturb th program of allied manufacture in this country, but we had not to cut off the supplies of raw material to our allies, and we had not to disturb the ndustry of this country to such an extent that products upon which they depended for the success of their military operations would be interfered with, both agricultural and commer-ial and industrial products. "At the outset the idea was that we would be of financial and industrial as-sistance to our allies during the year 1918, and I think I probably can read from the Metropolitan Magazine for August a suggestion which will show what the current expectation of the country was. The editor of the Metro-politan Magazine was protesting against what he believed to be the intention of the government at that
